Brand New Book  Print on Demand .An excerpt from A Historical Sketch of the Family of O Daly: A.D. 1213, FIONN O BROLLAGHAN, steward to O Donnell (Donnell Mor), went to Connacht. to collect O Donnell s rent, He first repaired to Carbury of Drumcliff, where with his attendants he visited the house of the poet Muircadhach O Daly of Lios-an-Doill, and being a churle servant of a hero, he began to abuse the poet very much (although his lord had given him no instructions to do so). The poet becoming enraged at his conduct, seized a sharp axe, and dealt him a blow which killed him on the spot; and then to avoid O Donnell, he fled into Clanrickard. When O Donnell received intelligence of this, he collected all his forces, and pursued him to Doire-Ui-Dhomhnaill (Derrydonnell) in Clanrickard, -a place which was named from him, because he encamped there for a night; and he proceeded to burn and plunder the country, until at last the son of William submitted to him, having previously sent Muireadhach to seek for protection in Thomond. O Donnell pursued him, and proceeded to plunder and ravage that country also, until Donough Cairbreach O Brien sent Muircadhach away to the people of Limerick. O Donnell followed him to the gate of Limerick, and pitching his camp at Moin-Ui-Dhomhnaill (which was named from him), laid siege to the town; and the inhabitants at O Donnell s command expelled Muircadhach, who found no asylum any where, but was sent from hand to hand until he arrived in Dublin. O Donnell then returned home, having first traversed and completed the visitation of all Connacht. He mustered his forces again without much...
