Until she was twenty-two years of age, this woman had had attacks of epilepsy, which occurred at first three or four times a week, and afterwards at longer intervals. Five years ago she had a fainting fit and fell from the second story. Six months after this accident, she noticed that her feet had increased in size, and later, her hands, face, and breast began to develop abnormally. About the same time her courses ceased. Finally, three years ago, the patient became strabismic, polyuric, and lost her strength. She now presents a classical picture of acromegalia: the hands and feet are transversely enlarged, the face has assumed an enormous, development, and the lips and tongue are voluminous. No sensory disturbances are found in the patient. All the senses are normal except that of sight. Examination of the eyes shows the existence...
