Excerpt: . the family of Stuart of Rosyth, was born in this castle, and that the Protector visited it, during the time he commanded the army in Scotland. To the eastward of the castle is St. Margaret s Hope; a small bay which derived its name from that Princess having landed here, after having forsaken England to return to Hungary. North Queensferry. Although North Queensferry is in the parish of Dunfermline, yet we shall treat of it as belonging to that of Inverkeithing, being the most natural arrangement. Indeed the Scottish counties and parishes are divided in such a capricious manner, as if the divisors had meant to put to scorn every principle of geometry. When this passage first began to be generally used, is beyond the reach of record. It can be traced, however, to the middle of the eleventh century, from its present name. Upon this name Chalmers has the following remarks.-- There is no proof that this name had been imposed during the reign of Margaret, who died in 1093. There is positive evidence, that the name did not exist, during the reign of her youngest son, David I. j for, when he granted this Ferry to the monks of Dunfermline, he called it Pasmgium de Inverkelhin. It first appeared under the name of Queensferry, in a charter ef Malcolm IV. in 1164, when was granted to the monks of Scone, and their men, free passage, ad porium rcgince. It is easy...
