The majority of architects are men who studied for their profession before any thorough investigation of reinforced concrete construction had been made. They are now called upon by their clients to design in a material requiring special and intimate study of its characteristics, and the solution of intricate formulae to determine the proper composition, arrangement, and dimensions of its component parts. Many theories have been advanced by many authorities during the progress of scientific research and experiment. Revisions in these theories have been made from time to time until they now tend to converge toward a common focus, but as yet these theories have not been put in practical working shape, and as a result many structures for which reinforced concrete is specially adapted are built of other material. It is therefore the purpose of the author to publish information of reinforced concrete in the shape of standard sections, tables, and specifications, that will enable designs to be made in this material as rapidly and as intelligently as in wood or steel. The tables contained herein have been in practical use in designing and constructing several large buildings in the City of Boston and elsewhere, and the work designed has been approved by conservative concrete specialists. The need of a standard form of construction with standard specifications is often brought forcibly to mind by the failure of reinforced concrete structures through no fault of the materials entering therein, but through the lack of...
