PREFACE It has been difficult, indeed, for the editor of this work to abridge the great volume of the letters and telegrams of Abraham Lincoln. Almost every one of Lincolns earlier letters throws valuable light on his personality, and from the time of his election to the Presidency onward, there are but few communications of his which do not bear an intimate relation to his official acts and utterances, as well as to the stirring events of the times. For example, in view of the estrangement which developed between Mr. Lincoln and Secretary Chase, every recommendation by the President of an, office-seeker, no matter how obscure he might be, becomes an important exhibit, testifying to the political pressure under which Mr. Lincoln was placed, and the courteous consideration with which he transmitted it to his equally harassed and more irritable minister. And the many telegrams sent to General McClellan by his Commander-inChief, repeating in the same words a request for news of the armys movement (sic) prove as could no statement of historian or biographer how the Presidents anxiety was straining to the breaking point his forbearance of his principal generals inactivity. These three volumes contain, besides correspondence proper, those military orders and those messages to Congress which relate to specific persons. All these writings are arranged in the alphabetical order of surnames of addresses in the case of letters and telegrams, and of persons referred to in the case of orders and messages. Under...
